Exhibition Update
One of the archaeologically significant finds from the 1979 archaeological dig was the Weeping Heart Brooch. This was discussed in this past newsletter: FOCS News Edition 7

This artifact is so notable that the original brooch is on display at the Museum of the American Revolution in Philadelphia. If you haven't been able to view the brooch, you will now have the opportunity to view it closer to home. The Museum of the American Revolution has created a replica of the brooch, and it is now on display at our exhibit in the Springettsbury Township Building, courtesy of the State Museum of Pennsylvania Harrisburg.
The exhibit has also expanded to include a display of several paintings by local artists. The artwork, in various mediums, depicts life at Camp Security.

This exhibit can now be viewed in the lobby of the Springettsbury Township Municipal Building at 1501 Mount Zion Road, York, Pennsylvania (Open 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m. Monday through Friday, excluding Township Holidays).

Join Us

Contact us at: campsecurity@campsecurity.org