The Friends of Camp Security invites the public to an open meeting to learn the results of the recent remote sensing studies conducted at the Camp Security site through a partnership with Shippensburg University.
The presentation will begin at 7 p.m. on Tuesday October 2 at the Springettsbury Township Building, 1501 Mount Zion Road. The research team will be represented by at least one of the Shippensburg professors who led the exploration, which utilized several geophysical methods. These results will help guide future archaeological digs in the quest pinpoint the exact location of the secure stockaded area of the camp.

The evening will also mark the opening of an exhibit of artifacts on loan from the Pennsylvania Historical and Museum Commission. It will feature a variety of objects recovered, during a previous extensive archaeological dig, at the village of prisoner huts nicknamed “Camp Indulgence” outside the stockade.

Camp Security is said to be the only surviving Revolutionary War Prisoner of War Camp that has not been developed over. The site has been preserved through the cooperation of state, county and municipal bodies; private and public funds; individual donors; and the Friends of Camp Security. It is now part of the Springettsbury Township park system and will be interpreted in the future.
